

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Christopher Shays and Martin Meehan,

Plaintiffs,

v.

United States Federal Election Commission,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 02-CV-1984
(Judge Kollar-Kotelly)

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE OF
U.S. SENATORS JOHN MCCAIN AND RUSSELL D. FEINGOLD IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Trevor Potter
(D.C. Bar No. 413778)
Glen Shor
THE CAMPAIGN LEGAL CENTER
1101 Connecticut Ave. N.W., Suite 330
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 736-2200
Fax: (202) 736-2222

Counsel for Amici Curiae

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES .....	iii
STATEMENT OF INTEREST .....	1
INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT .....	2
ARGUMENT .....	4
I.    The FEC’s BCRA Regulations Unlawfully Preserve Parts of the Soft Money System and Undermine the Purposes of the Act.....	4
II.   This Case Is of Critical Importance to Protecting the Integrity of Federal Campaign Finance Law and Ensuring Its Fundamentally Important Purposes Are Served .....	9
A.  If Permitted to Stand, the Unlawful Loopholes Opened by the FEC’s BCRA Regulations Will Be Severely Exploited, Undermining the Purposes of the Act.....	10
B.  If Permitted to Stand, the Unlawful Loopholes Opened by the FEC’s BCRA Regulations Will Be a Foundation for Broader Unraveling of Federal Campaign Finance Law .....	11
CONCLUSION.....	16
CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE .....	17-18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Federal Cases

Page

Buckley v. Valeo,
424 U.S. 1 (1976).....11

* McConnell v. FEC,
540 U.S. [ ], 124 S.Ct. 619 (2003)..... passim

Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC, 528 U.S. 377 (2000) .....4

Federal Statutes

* Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002,
Pub. L. No. 107-155, 161 Stat. 81
(codified as amended in 2 U.S.C. § 431 et. seq.
and in scattered sections of 47 U.S.C)..... passim

Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002,
Pub. L. No. 107-155, §§ 214(b)&(c), 116 Stat. 81, 94-95.....6

2 U.S.C.A. § 431(8)(A)(i).....4

2 U.S.C.A. § 441a(a)(1).....4

2 U.S.C.A. § 441b(a) .....4

2 U.S.C. § 431(20)(A).....6

2 U.S.C. §§ 441b(a) .....6

2 U.S.C. §§ 441b(b)(2) .....6

2 U.S.C. §§ 441b(c) .....6

2 U.S.C. § 441i(a).....5

2 U.S.C. § 441i(b).....6

2 U.S.C. § 441i(e).....6

Federal Regulations

11 C.F.R. § 100.24(a)(3).....9

11 C.F.R. § 109.21(c).....	9, 11
----------------------------	-------

Legislative Materials

147 Cong. Rec. H3980-90 (daily ed. Jul. 12, 2001).....	7
147 Cong. Rec. S3254 (daily ed. Apr. 2, 2001) (statement of Sen. Thompson).....	12
147 Cong. Rec. S3254-55 (daily ed. Apr. 2, 2001) (statement of Sen. Thompson)...	12, 13
148 Cong. Rec. H347 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2003) (statement of Rep. Pelosi).....	6
148 Cong. Rec. H351 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002) (statement of Rep. Kind).....	6, 7
148 Cong. Rec. H402 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002) (statement of Rep. DeLauro).....	6
148 Cong. Rec. H404 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002) (statement of Rep. Menendez).....	6
148 Cong. Rec. H405 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2003) (statement of Rep. Wamp).....	6
148 Cong. Rec. H465-66 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002).....	7
148 Cong. Rec. S2105 (daily ed. Mar. 20, 2002) (statement of Sen. Feingold).....	8
148 Cong. Rec. S2110 (daily ed. Mar. 20, 2002) (statement of Sen. Thompson).....	5
148 Cong. Rec. S2160-61 (daily ed. Mar. 20, 2002).....	7

Other Authorities

A. Mitchell, Campaign Finance Bill Passes in Senate, 59-41 , N.Y. Times, Apr. 3, 2001.....	7
B. A. Smith, Block Those Limits , Newsday, Mar. 18, 2001, available at 2001 WL 92221 .....	2
B. A. Smith, Enron Didn't Corrupt Washington , Wall St. J., Feb. 12, 2002, available at 2002 WL-WSJ 3385685 .....	2
B. A. Smith, McCain-Feingold Will Hurt The Little Guy , Wall St. J., Mar. 20, 2001, available at 2001 WL-WSJ 2857719.....	2
B. A. Smith, Chairman, Federal Election Commission, Remarks to Conference Institute, Washington, D.C. (Jan. 29, 2004), available at http://www.fec.gov/members/smith/smithspeech03.pdf .....	2

D. M. Mason, Campaign Finance Reform: Broad, Vague and Unenforceable, Lecture to the Heritage Foundation (Feb. 13, 2002), available at http://www.heritage.org/Research/GovernmentReform/HL732.cfm .....	2
FEC Advisory Op. 1978-10 (Aug. 29, 1978).....	12
FEC Advisory Op. 1979-17 (Jul. 16, 1979).....	12
G. Johnson, Pivotal Moments United Coalition Despite Pressure , Boston Globe, Feb. 15, 2002.....	7
P.H. Stone, Scrambling for Dollars , Nat'l J., Feb. 23, 2002, available at 2002 WL 7094739.....	13
Report of Thomas E. Mann, McConnell v. FEC , 251 F. Supp. 1976 (D.D.C. 2003) (No. 02-582), aff'd in part and rev'd in part , 540 U.S. [ ], 124 S.Ct. 619 (2003).....	4
T. B. Edsall, New Routes to Channel 'Soft Money' On Horizon , Wash. Post, Jun. 23, 2002.....	9

* Authorities upon which we chiefly rely are marked by asterisks.

STATEMENT OF INTEREST

Amicus John McCain is a U.S. Senator, representing the state of Arizona. Senator McCain was first elected to the U.S. Senate in November of 1986 and was re-elected every subsequent six years. Amicus Russell D. Feingold is a U.S. Senator, representing the state of Wisconsin. Senator Feingold was first elected to the U.S. Senate in November of 1992 and re-elected in November of 1998. Senators McCain and Feingold are candidates for re-election to the Senate in November of 2004.

Senators McCain and Feingold were also the principal U.S. Senate sponsors of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 (“BCRA”). They worked together over seven years to secure passage of BCRA, to rid politics of the corrupting influence of soft money and enhance the public’s confidence in the workings of its governing institutions.

Senators McCain and Feingold strongly oppose the Federal Election Commission regulations being challenged in this case. They believe that these regulations unlawfully preserve parts of the soft money system which were in fact banished by Congress in BCRA. As such, Senators McCain and Feingold believe that the regulations, among other things, deny the American people the full measure of protection from actual and apparent political corruption to which they are entitled under law and negatively affect those who seek election to federal office, including themselves. They seek leave to file this brief to present their views to the Court on the importance of this case to the achievement of the purposes of BCRA.*

---

* Senators McCain and Feingold could not participate as plaintiffs in this case because, in contrast to the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Rules of the U.S. Senate do not allow them to accept pro bono legal representation as parties in this matter. But see S. Res. 227, 107th Cong. (2002) (allowing pro bono legal services to be provided to Senators with respect to civil actions challenging the constitutionality of a federal statute which expressly authorizes a Senator to file or intervene in an action). Senators are, however, permitted to accept pro bono services for the filing of amicus briefs, and Senators McCain and Feingold have accordingly authorized the Campaign Legal Center to file this brief on their behalf.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Now and then the Supreme Court issues a decision that cries out to the public, “We don’t know what we’re doing!” McConnell is such a decision.<sup>1</sup>

This statement, in a speech by Federal Election Commission (“FEC” or “Commission”) Chairman Bradley A. Smith delivered a month after the U.S. Supreme Court’s decision in McConnell v. FEC,<sup>2</sup> illustrates the disdain with which the FEC has regarded the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 (“BCRA”).<sup>3</sup>

Unfortunately, after Congress mandated a break with past fundraising practices in enacting BCRA, the agency charged with enforcing that mandate could not manage to break with its own past of, in the words of the McConnell decision, having “subverted” federal campaign finance law.<sup>4</sup>

Indeed, the unraveling of federal campaign finance restraints by soft money preceding the enactment of BCRA was largely caused by the failure of the FEC to enforce these restraints in accordance with their text and intent. This fact is confirmed by

---

<sup>1</sup> See Bradley A. Smith, Chairman, Federal Election Commission, Remarks to American Conference Institute, Washington, D.C. (Jan. 29, 2004), available at <http://www.fec.gov/members/smith/smithspeech03.pdf>.

<sup>2</sup> McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. [ ], 124 S.Ct. 619, 648-54 (2003).

<sup>3</sup> Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-155, 161 Stat. 81 (codified as amended in 2 U.S.C. § 431 et. seq. and in scattered sections of 47 U.S.C.). FEC Commissioners also spoke out against BCRA in speeches and articles at the time of congressional consideration of this legislation, declaring it ill-advised and unconstitutional. See Bradley A. Smith, Enron Didn’t Corrupt Washington, Wall St. J., Feb. 12, 2002, available at 2002 WL-WSJ 3385685; Bradley A. Smith, McCain-Feingold Will Hurt The Little Guy, Wall St. J., Mar. 20, 2001, available at 2001 WL-WSJ 2857719; Bradley A. Smith, Block Those Limits, Newsday, Mar. 18, 2001, available at 2001 WL 92221; David M. Mason, Campaign Finance Reform: Broad, Vague and Unenforceable, Lecture to the Heritage Foundation (Feb. 13, 2002), available at <http://www.heritage.org/Research/GovernmentReform/HL732.cfm>.

<sup>4</sup> See 124 S.Ct. at 660 (“§323(a) . . . simply effects a return to the scheme that was approved in Buckley and that was subverted by the creation of the FEC’s allocation regime”) (emphasis added).

the McConnell decision, which indicated that “the FEC regulations permitted more than Congress, in enacting FECA, had ever intended.”<sup>5</sup>

In its BCRA rulemakings, the FEC once again “permitted more than Congress . . . had ever intended.” The regulations challenged in this case are contrary to the text and intent of BCRA and preserve parts of the soft money system banished by Congress. These regulations deny the American people the full measure of reform to which the law entitles them. For these reasons, amici firmly believe that the challenged regulations should be overturned.

The purpose of this amici curiae brief is to underscore the importance of the case pending before the Court. The FEC’s unlawful regulations undermine the fundamentally important purposes served by BCRA. The time-proven understanding that ““candidates, donors, and parties test the limits of the current law””<sup>6</sup> confirms the debilitating consequences of these regulations. Past experience suggests a further threat: that the unlawful loopholes adopted by the FEC and their faulty analytical underpinnings will be expanded to broader contexts, undermining federal campaign finance restraints in the process.

---

<sup>5</sup> See id. at 660 n.44.

<sup>6</sup> See id. at 661 (citations omitted).

ARGUMENT

I. The FEC's BCRA Regulations Unlawfully Preserve Parts of the Soft Money System and Undermine the Purposes of the Act.

“Leave the perception of impropriety unanswered, and the cynical assumption that large donors call the tune could jeopardize the willingness of voters to take part in democratic governance.” With these words, written in its Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC decision of 2000,<sup>7</sup> the U.S. Supreme Court posed an implicit challenge to Congress and the President. Though appearing in a decision upholding limits on contributions to candidates for state office, they spoke sternly to the prevailing state of federal campaign finance regulation.

Indeed, by 2000, federal campaign finance restraints enacted over the course of a century,<sup>8</sup> in the wake of scandals demonstrating the corrupting influence of big money in politics, had been thoroughly unraveled by a loophole: soft money. On account of this loophole, the use of statutorily forbidden corporate and labor treasury funds and unlimited political donations from individuals had become commonplace in federal campaigns.<sup>9</sup>

As political parties and elected officials aggressively pursued larger and larger soft money donations to finance federal campaigns – with law, as a practical matter, supplying no barrier to their quest – the American people increasingly perceived soft

---

<sup>7</sup> See Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 390 (2000).

<sup>8</sup> See 2 U.S.C.A. § 441b(a) (West Supp. 2001) (banning contributions and expenditures of corporate and union treasury funds in connection with federal elections); 2 U.S.C.A. § 441a(a)(1) (West Supp. 2001) (limiting “contributions” by individuals to federal candidates, national party committees and other political committees); 2 U.S.C.A. § 431(8)(A)(i) (West Supp. 2001) (defining a “contribution” as a deposit of anything of value made “for the purpose of influencing any election for Federal office”).

<sup>9</sup> See 124 S.Ct. at 648-54; Report of Thomas E. Mann, McConnell v. FEC, 251 F. Supp. 1976 (D.D.C. 2003) (No. 02-582), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 540 U.S. [ ], 124 S.Ct. 619 (2003).

money as influencing their governing institutions, and rightly grew disgusted. Indeed, any voter with an understanding of human nature and an awareness of the vast amounts of soft money given and spent to influence federal elections could not be blamed for believing that federal officeholders were unduly influenced by their benefactors' generosity.

Then-Senator Fred Thompson (R-TN) explained the problem in typically straightforward terms:

When the very people who have legislation before you are coming to you with greater and greater amounts of money for your political campaign, that creates a potential conflict of interest that we simply do not need. It does not look good. The American people think, the average Joe on the street thinks, that with that much money being paid to that few people, they are expecting something for it.<sup>10</sup>

In a moment of conscience and courage, Congress decided in 2002 that the American people deserved better than campaign finance limits that existed only on paper. It enacted BCRA to restore the regulatory fabric that had been repeatedly torn by the soft money loophole, with no less important a goal than to enhance the public's confidence in its mechanisms of governance.

BCRA is designed to restore force to longstanding federal campaign finance restraints and prevent their circumvention. Accordingly, the statute:

- bans national party committees, officers or agents acting on behalf of national committees, and entities "directly or indirectly established, financed, maintained, or controlled" by national committees from all forms of soliciting, receiving, directing, transferring or spending soft money;<sup>11</sup>
- prohibits state and local parties from spending soft money on any form of the statutorily defined "Federal election activit[ies]," with a narrow exception

---

<sup>10</sup> See 148 Cong. Rec. S2110 (daily ed. Mar. 20, 2002) (statement of Sen. Thompson).

<sup>11</sup> See 2 U.S.C § 441i(a).

available only upon strict compliance with all the safeguards of the “Levin Amendment”,<sup>12</sup>

- proscribes all solicitation, receipt, direction, transfer and disbursement of soft money in connection with elections by federal candidates and officeholders;<sup>13</sup>
- requires the FEC to issue regulations which fully implement the statutory standard for coordination,<sup>14</sup> and
- prohibits expenditures of corporate and union treasury funds on the defined “electioneering communication[s].”<sup>15</sup>

These and other provisions of BCRA clearly required a significant break from past practices and fundamental change in the ways federal campaigns were to be financed. Indeed, they were well-understood as doing so. As then-House Democratic Whip Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) eloquently stated during legislative debate on BCRA:

Today, we have an opportunity to achieve a great victory for the American people, to bring democracy back to them . . . We have an opportunity to create a new architecture of political fund-raising in our country which devolves to the grassroots, to the people from which power comes and where it belongs.<sup>16</sup>

Republican Congressman Zack Wamp (R-TN) likewise remarked during House debate, “Do not be afraid of giving up soft money . . . we should not be afraid to go into a new era and to leave the old behind.”<sup>17</sup>

---

<sup>12</sup> See 2 U.S.C. §§ 441i(b) & 431(20)(A).

<sup>13</sup> See 2 U.S.C. § 441i(e).

<sup>14</sup> See Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-155, §§ 214(b)&(c), 116 Stat. 81, 94-95.

<sup>15</sup> See 2 U.S.C. §§ 441b(a), (b)(2) & (c).

<sup>16</sup> See 148 Cong. Rec. H347 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2003) (statement of Rep. Pelosi) (emphasis added).

<sup>17</sup> See id. at H405 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2003) (statement of Rep. Wamp) (emphasis added). See also id. at H404 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002) (statement of Rep. Menendez) (“Vote for Shays-Meehan . . . and let us have a new day dawn in our democracy, one that is a democracy in which the individual citizens’ right to vote and the power of their vote will ultimately determine fate of policy in this country, not hundreds of millions of dollars of special interest moneys”); id. at H402 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002) (statement of Rep. DeLauro) (“This is a historic moment. We have the opportunity to end the era of unregulated soft money”); id. at

Indeed, the seven years time, and extraordinary legislative efforts,<sup>18</sup> it took to secure enactment of BCRA demonstrate that this legislation represents fundamental change. Had defenders of the status quo considered BCRA conducive to the continuance of soft money in federal campaigns, they would hardly have fought its passage as vigorously as they did.

In McConnell v. FEC, the U.S. Supreme Court firmly validated Congress's work – upholding virtually all of BCRA, confirming the concerns that motivated its enactment, recognizing its careful tailoring, and establishing a wide berth for the permissible operation of federal campaign finance restraints under our Constitution.

Notably, the Court came to the same conclusions as Congress about the serious threat posed by soft money to the integrity of our political institutions. Answering the core question of “whether large soft-money contributions to national party committees have a corrupting influence or give rise to the appearance of corruption,” the Court replied: “[b]oth common sense and the ample record in these cases confirm Congress’ belief that they do.” See 124 S.Ct. at 661 (emphasis in original). It indicated that “[t]he

---

H351 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002) (statement of Rep. Kind) (“Right now we stand on the brink of historic reform . . . that will put the power of democracy back in the hands of ordinary Americans . . . that will force politicians and political parties to get back to the grassroots level”).

<sup>18</sup> Although the House passed versions of BCRA in 1998 and 1999, filibusters foiled similar success in the Senate until April of 2001. See Alison Mitchell, Campaign Finance Bill Passes in Senate, 59-41, N.Y. Times, Apr. 3, 2001, at A1. Following the Senate's passage of the legislation in April of 2001, its proponents encountered procedural obstacles in the House. The bill was slated for debate on the House floor in July of 2001. However, opponents of the legislation proposed bizarre and unfair procedures for its floor consideration. A majority of the House then voted down those proposed procedures. See 147 Cong. Rec. H3980-90 (daily ed. Jul. 12, 2001). In turn, the House Leadership refused to reschedule the legislation for consideration. Proponents of BCRA were accordingly forced to take the extraordinary step of filing a “discharge petition” and seeking the required 218 signatures of House Members. They secured the 218th signature in January of 2002. See Glen Johnson, Pivotal Moments United Coalition Despite Pressure, Boston Globe, Feb. 15, 2002, at A34. In February of 2002, the House finally considered and approved BCRA, and just over one month later, the Senate enacted the legislation which had passed the House (thus avoiding any need for a “conference committee”). See 148 Cong. Rec. H465-66 (daily ed. Feb. 13, 2002); 148 Cong. Rec. S2160-61 (daily ed. Mar. 20, 2002).

evidence connects soft money to manipulations of the legislative calendar, leading to Congress' failure to enact, among other things, generic drug legislation, tort reform, and tobacco legislation.” See id. at 664. The Court also saw the same corruption concerns underlying solicitations of soft money by national party committees: “[a] national committee is likely to respond favorably to a donation made at its request regardless of whether the recipient is the committee itself or another entity.” See id. at 668.

Moreover, the Court agreed with Congress that “the corrupting influence of soft money does not insinuate itself into the political process solely through national party committees” – and, in particular, that “state committees function as an alternate avenue for precisely the same corrupting forces.” See id. at 672. It added that “[l]arge soft-money donations at a candidate’s or officeholder’s behest give rise to all of the same corruption concerns posed by contributions made directly to the candidate or officeholder.” See id. at 683.<sup>19</sup>

And importantly, the Court reaffirmed that “combating the appearance or perception of corruption engendered by large campaign contributions” is “of ‘almost equal’ importance” to preventing cash-for-votes exchanges. See id. at 660.

As Congress finished its work on BCRA in March of 2002, the FEC was urged to “carry out the will of Congress, to implement and enforce the law, not to undermine it.”<sup>20</sup> Unfortunately, the agency did not heed this request for it simply to fulfill its statutory charge.

---

<sup>19</sup> Furthermore, after noting the absence of arguments in the case contesting that the government had a “compelling” interest in prohibiting independent expenditures of corporate and union treasury funds for express advocacy, the Court upheld the extension of such restrictions to “electioneering communications” – dismissing allegations of overbreadth and underinclusiveness. See 124 S.Ct. at 694-98.

<sup>20</sup> See 148 Cong. Rec. S2105 (daily ed. Mar. 20, 2002) (statement of Sen. Feingold).

Instead, contravening the text and intent of BCRA and undermining its fundamentally important purposes, the FEC adopted regulations that unlawfully preserve parts of the banished “old era” and maintain a role for soft money in federal elections. The regulations that carve out wide swaths of a federal election year for outside groups to air soft money campaign ads which were blatantly coordinated with federal candidates,<sup>21</sup> and that allow state parties to pay part of the costs of phone banks encouraging core party voters to “get out and vote” with unlimited soft money donations (on the pretense that this is not “get-out-the-vote activity”),<sup>22</sup> are but two examples of a broad pattern of unlawful interpretation with a common result: allowing soft money banned by Congress to creep back into federal elections.

The FEC’s departure from the command of BCRA was so pronounced that a Commissioner who had voted to implement the Act in accordance with its text and intent said to his colleagues responsible for the unlawful regulations which were adopted, “You have so tortured this law, it’s beyond silly.”<sup>23</sup>

The FEC’s unlawful regulations should not be allowed to stand as the final word on BCRA’s implementation. Neither this regulatory agency nor any other has the authority to rewrite Congress’s work.

II. This Case Is of Critical Importance to Protecting the Integrity of Federal Campaign Finance Law and Ensuring Its Fundamentally Important Purposes Are Served.

---

<sup>21</sup> See 11 C.F.R. § 109.21(c) (excluding non-express advocacy public communications from treatment as a “coordinated communication” if publicly distributed or disseminated more than 120 days before a federal election).

<sup>22</sup> See 11 C.F.R. § 100.24(a)(3) (failing to include encouraging people to vote in the regulatory definition of “[g]et-out-the-vote activity”).

<sup>23</sup> See Thomas B. Edsall, New Routes to Channel ‘Soft Money’ On Horizon, Wash. Post, Jun. 23, 2002, at A07 (emphasis added).

It is critically important that the FEC's unlawful BCRA regulations be overturned. At stake is whether the American people will receive the full measure of protection from actual and apparent political corruption provided by the laws enacted by their elected representatives. The public is surely entitled to that measure of protection: the law is Congress's covenant with the American people – here concerning a matter fundamental to the integrity of their governing institutions – and it must be honored in its entirety.

If the FEC's unlawful regulations are allowed to stand, the public will not receive what it is due. The fundamentally important purposes of BCRA will be undermined – inevitably and significantly. And the seeds of future enforcement problems will be sowed.

A. If Permitted to Stand, the Unlawful Loopholes Opened by the FEC's BCRA Regulations Will Be Severely Exploited, Undermining the Purposes of the Act.

The Supreme Court reminded us in the McConnell decision that the “entire history of campaign finance regulation” teaches “the hard lesson of circumvention.” See 124 S.Ct. at 673. Along these lines, the Court separately noted that “‘candidates, donors, and parties test the limits of the current law.’” See id. at 661 (citations omitted). The perceived rewards for testing the law's limits are magnified under current political conditions, in which control of the presidency, Senate or House of Representatives (or some combination thereof) is seemingly up for grabs every other November. Given the history and high stakes of political campaigns, the unlawful loopholes opened by the FEC's BCRA regulations will inevitably be exploited.

For example, as previously mentioned, the FEC's regulations permit federal candidates to sit down with outside spenders and openly craft soft money advertisements that sing their praises or trash their opponents – and can then be aired to their electorates in wide swaths of their election years.<sup>24</sup> In turn, this conduct will surely fuel public cynicism about elected officials and the workings of our governing institutions.

In Buckley v. Valeo, the Supreme Court considered “prearranged or coordinated expenditures” to be subject to campaign contribution limits, noting that this application of the law served to “prevent attempts to circumvent the Act.” See 424 U.S. 1, 46-47 (1976). In unlawfully licensing circumvention of a vital anti-circumvention measure, the FEC has resurrected precisely the danger perceived by the Buckley Court in “prearranged or coordinated expenditures”: “that [such] expenditures will be given as a quid pro quo for improper commitments from the candidate.” See id. at 47.

B. If Permitted To Stand, the Unlawful Loopholes Opened by the FEC’s BCRA Regulations Will Be a Foundation for Broader Unraveling of Federal Campaign Finance Law.

Years of experience with campaign finance regulation suggest a further threat to the proper enforcement of federal election law if the FEC’s unlawful BCRA regulations are upheld. These regulations could very well serve as a foundation for a repeat of the downward regulatory spiral which characterized the rise of the soft money system in the first place.

Indeed, the wide breadth of the FEC’s wrongdoing in its BCRA rulemakings provides multiple departure points for future mischief. Moreover, some of the faulty legal analyses employed by the Commission are so sweeping that they will inevitably be imported to new contexts, undermining other aspects of federal campaign finance law.

---

<sup>24</sup> See 11 C.F.R. § 109.21(c) (excluding non-express advocacy public communications from treatment as a “coordinated communication” if publicly distributed or disseminated more than 120 days before a federal election).

Above all, the past cannot be ignored. The rise of the soft money system illustrates the dangerous phenomenon of “loophole-creep.” That history stands as a serious cautionary tale as to the potential consequences of allowing the FEC’s unlawful BCRA regulations to remain in force.

In a 1978 Advisory Opinion, the FEC opened the door to soft money in federal elections, by permitting state and local parties to spend an “allocated” mixture of hard and soft money on voter drive activities affecting both federal and state elections.<sup>25</sup> This initial opening for soft money in federal campaigns was to grow into a gaping loophole which thoroughly unraveled federal campaign finance law.

Soon after its adoption, the 1978 ruling became a basis for allowing the receipt of unlimited donations by national parties.<sup>26</sup> Then, in the late 1980’s and early 1990’s, “allocation” migrated to party payments for generic television advertising aimed at reinforcing the campaign themes of their presidential nominees.<sup>27</sup>

Finally, in the 1996 presidential elections, the “allocation” theory – developed to account for a perceived dual focus of certain campaign activities on federal and state elections – was employed by the political parties in financing television advertising promoting or attacking only presidential candidates (so long as the parties made the easy adjustment of avoiding express advocacy in this advertising).<sup>28</sup>

---

<sup>25</sup> See FEC Advisory Op. 1978-10 (Aug. 29, 1978).

<sup>26</sup> See FEC Advisory Op. 1979-17 (Jul. 16, 1979).

<sup>27</sup> See 147 Cong. Rec. S3254 (daily ed. Apr. 2, 2001) (statement of Sen. Thompson) (exhibit citing Anthony Corrado, The Origins and Growth of Party Soft Money Finance (Mar. 30, 2001)).

<sup>28</sup> See id. at S3254-55 (daily ed. Apr. 2, 2001).

With the political parties able to finance roughly two-thirds of the costs of their presidential campaign advertisements with soft money, national party soft money fundraising exploded.<sup>29</sup> Moreover, the ability of the parties to use soft money for federal candidate-specific campaign advertisements paved the way for soft money “joint fundraising committees,” which were little more than a device for Senate candidates to raise soft money and launder it through the party structure to benefit their own campaigns.<sup>30</sup>

Neither statutory nor constitutional law compelled these developments. As the Supreme Court made clear in the McConnell decision, the soft money system for parties and candidates was instead the product of unwarranted legal interpretations by the FEC. In the Court’s view, the FEC’s “allocation” theory was an unlawful loophole run amok, with severe consequences for the integrity of our political system.

Notably, the Court described BCRA’s national party soft money ban as “simply effect[ing] a return to the scheme that was approved in Buckley and that was subverted by the creation of the FEC’s allocation regime, which permitted the political parties to fund federal electioneering efforts with a combination of hard and soft money.” See 124 S.Ct. at 660 (emphasis added).

The Court also broadly tied the FEC’s “allocation regime” to harmful consequences for our political system:

The question for present purposes is whether large soft-money contributions to national party committees have a corrupting influence or

---

<sup>29</sup> See id. (daily ed. Apr. 2, 2001). See also McConnell, 124 S.Ct. at 649 (“As the permissible uses of soft money expanded, the amount of soft money raised and spent by the national political parties increased exponentially”).

<sup>30</sup> See Peter H. Stone, Scrambling for Dollars, Nat’l J., Feb. 23, 2002, available at 2002 WL 7094739.

give rise to the appearance of corruption. Both common sense and the ample record in these cases confirm Congress' belief that they do . . . [T]he FEC's allocation regime has invited widespread circumvention of FECA's limits on contributions to parties for the purpose of influencing federal elections. Under this system, corporate, union, and wealthy individual donors have been free to contribute substantial sums of soft money to the national parties, which the parties can spend for the specific purpose of influencing a particular candidate's federal election. It is not only plausible, but likely, that candidates would feel grateful for such donations and that donors would seek to exploit that gratitude.<sup>31</sup>

Even dissenting Chief Justice Rehnquist evidently saw shortcomings in the FEC's implementation of federal campaign finance law preceding BCRA. Disputing the need for the new law, the Chief Justice observed that “[m]any of the abuses described by the Court involve donations that were made for the ‘purpose of influencing a federal election,’ and thus are already regulated.” See 124 S.Ct. at 781 (emphasis added) (citations omitted). Accordingly, he indicated that “Congress could have sought to have the existing restrictions enforced” instead of enacting BCRA<sup>32</sup> – a proposal that certainly does not reflect well on the entity charged with enforcing those “existing restrictions.”

The story of the soft money system casts the FEC's unlawful BCRA regulations and their faulty analytical underpinnings not merely as today's pressing problems but also harbingers of greater harm to come. Hard experience teaches how unlawful loopholes can metastasize, at grave cost to the integrity of our political system.

Fortunately, that experience need not be repeated. The FEC's unlawful BCRA regulations have been challenged relatively early in their lifespan, in the case pending before the Court. Just as BCRA sought a “new era” for campaign fundraising practices, this case presents the opportunity for a “new era” in enforcement of the laws on the books. Unlawful loopholes must be nipped in the bud, before they take root.

---

<sup>31</sup> See 124 S.Ct. at 661-62 (citations omitted).

<sup>32</sup> See 124 S.Ct. at 781.

CONCLUSION

Amici respectfully urge the Court to overturn the challenged regulations, for they are contrary to the text, intent and purposes of BCRA. The American people are entitled to the full measure of protection from actual and apparent political corruption provided by their laws.

Respectfully submitted,

By:

Trevor Potter
(D.C. Bar No. 413778)
Glen Shor
The CAMPAIGN LEGAL CENTER
1101 Connecticut Ave., N.W., Suite 330
Washington, D.C. 20036
Tel: (202) 736-2200
Fax: (202) 736-2222

Counsel for Amici Curiae

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that the foregoing brief has been served electronically upon the Court on this 27th day of February, 2004, pursuant to instructions received from the Office of the Clerk of Court by telephone. The instructions indicated that this item should be emailed in Adobe Acrobat format to dcd\_cmeef@dcd.uscourts.gov. The Office of the Clerk of Court also advised that such electronic filing renders other service upon the Court unnecessary. Pursuant to consent from counsel to the parties, the foregoing brief is likewise being served upon them electronically on this 27th day of February, 2004.

Roger M. Witten (Bar No. 163261)
David A. O'Neil (pro hac vice)
WILMER CUTLER PICKERING LLP
399 Park Avenue
New York, New York 10022
(212) 230-8800

Randolph D. Moss (Bar No. 417749)
Stacy E. Beck (Bar No. 480540)
WILMER CUTLER PICKERING LLP
2445 M Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20037
(202) 663-6000

Donald J. Simon (Bar No. 256388)
SONOSKY, CHAMBERS, SACHSE,
ENDRESON & PERRY LLP
1425 K Street, N.W., Suite 600
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 682-0240

Charles G. Curtis, Jr. (pro hac vice)
Michelle M. Umberger (Bar No.480620)
Michael M. Markman
Sarah E. Reindl
HELLER EHRMAN WHITE &
McAULIFFE LLP
One East Main Street, Suite 201
Madison, Wisconsin 53703
(608) 663-7460

Brent N. Rushforth (Bar No. 331074)
Carl S. Nadler (Bar No. 395279)
Martina M. Stewart
HELLER EHRMAN WHITE &
McAULIFFE LLP
1666 K Street, N.W., Suite 300
Washington, DC. 20006
(202) 912-2000

Fred Wertheimer (Bar No. 154211)
Alexandra Edsall (Bar No. 453518)
DEMOCRACY 21
1825 Eye Street, N.W., Suite 400
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 429-2008

Lawrence H. Norton
Richard B. Bader (Bar No. 911073)
Stephen E. Hershkowitz (Bar No. 282947)
FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION
999 E Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20463
(202) 694-1650

Trevor Potter