1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 The crux of Plaintiffs'¹ case is that the Citizens Clean Elections Act (the "Act") chills 3 speech by deterring candidates from spending money on their campaigns. But undisputed 4 evidence establishes that both spending and electoral competition have dramatically increased 5 since voters adopted the Act in 1998. Between 1998 and 2006, candidate spending in Arizona 6 campaigns more than quadrupled, while independent expenditures went up over 3300%. Even 7 among high-spending candidates who choose not to accept the Act's public funding, campaign 8 expenditures have risen. Further, more candidates are running for office. Thus, the evidentiary 9 record indisputably establishes that the Act promotes, rather than deters, free speech. See North 10 Carolina Right to Life Comm. for Indep. Political Expenditures v. Leake, 524 F.3d 427, 437 (4th 11 Cir. 2008), cert. denied by Duke v. Leake, 129 S.Ct. 490 (Nov. 3, 2008) (upholding North 12 Carolina's matching funds provision and predicting that the provision would increase speech).

13 Moreover, Arizona's voters adopted the Act to advance a compelling government interest.
14 Prior to the Act's passage, nearly 10 percent of Arizona's legislature was indicted in a corruption 15 scandal known as AzScam. That scandal occurred despite the existence of the same contribution 16 limits that Plaintiffs now claim were sufficient to deter corruption. The voters correctly 17 concluded that contribution limits alone were insufficient, that a public financing alternative was 18 necessary, and that absent matching funds candidates would not accept public funding.

19 Because the undisputed evidence establishes that the Act does not abridge, but instead 20 promotes, free speech and that the Act was tailored to serve compelling public interests, 21 Plaintiffs' First Amendment claims should not survive summary judgment.

22 Plaintiffs' equal-protection claims fare no better. The Act does not discriminate against a 23 group of citizens, but instead offers all candidates a choice on equal terms between a system of 24 public financing and the traditional system of private financing. As the Supreme Court stated in 25 Buckley v. Valeo, in rejecting claims brought by non-participants in the presidential public 26 financing system, "[p]lainly, campaigns can be successfully carried out by means other than

27 _____
28 ¹ Because their claims are essentially the same, Plaintiffs and Plaintiff-Intervenors are referred to collectively in this brief as "Plaintiffs" unless otherwise specifically noted.

1 public financing; they have been up to this date, and this avenue is still open to all candidates.”
2 424 U.S. 1, 101 (1976). Accordingly, the Supreme Court and the lower federal courts have long 3 held that for the state to offer such a voluntary public financing program works no discrimination 4 against those candidates who are free to opt out. Id.; Rosenstiel v. Rodriguez, 101 F.3d 1544, 5 1548 (8th Cir. 1996) (citing Buckley); Republican Nat’l Comm. v. F.E.C., 487 F. Supp. 280, 283-6 84 (S.D.N.Y. 1980), judgment affirmed, 445 U.S. 955 (1980).

7 For these reasons, Defendant-Intervenor Clean Elections Institute respectfully requests 8 that the Court grant its motion for summary judgment.

9 II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

10 A. PROPOSITION 200’S CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

11 Although Plaintiffs contend that the Clean Elections Act should be struck down in favor 12 of a system that has only contribution limits, Arizona voters experimented with that very system 13 for twelve years before adopting the Clean Elections Act. In 1986, voters passed Proposition 200, 14 which established Arizona’s first contribution limits for state-level campaigns. Ariz. Rev. Stat.
15 Ann. §16-905 (2009) (historical note). Under the contribution limits, codified at Ariz. Rev. Stat.
16 § 16-905, individual contributors could give up to $200 per election to legislative candidates and 17 up to $500 per election for statewide candidates.

18 B. AZSCAM: CORRUPTION AND THE PERCEPTION OF CORRUPTION UNDER 19 ARIZONA’S CONTRIBUTION-LIMITS-ONLY REGIME

20 Five years into Arizona’s experiment with a contribution-limit-only scheme, Arizona 21 suffered one of the worst state-level corruption scandals in this nation’s history. The scandal, 22 which came to be known as AzScam, resulted from a police sting operation in which an 23 undercover informant posed as a Nevada businessman seeking to open a casino in Arizona.
24 Phoenix police videotaped Arizona legislators accepting bribes and campaign contributions in 25 exchange for agreeing to support gambling legislation. Separate Statement ¶ 4 (State v. Walker, 26 185 Ariz. 228, 231, 235 (Ct. App. 1995)).

27 AzScam revealed a pervasive pattern of corruption in Arizona government. Nearly 10 28 percent of Arizona’s legislature was indicted. Separate Statement ¶ 5 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. A,

1 Maricopa County Superior Court Docket, CR1991-000997 (reflecting indictments); id. Ex. B, L.
 2 Feldman, Indictment of Lawmakers Another Blow to Arizona, Los Angeles Times, Feb. 9, 1991, 3 at 1). In total, the sting resulted in the indictment of 23 people, mostly legislators and lobbyists, 4 and the conviction of at least one legislator on corruption-related charges. Separate Statement ¶¶
 5 6-7 (State v. Walker, 185 Ariz. at 231; Sandhu Decl. Ex. A, Maricopa County Superior Court 6 Docket, CR1991-000997 (reflecting indictments)). One long-time lobbyist, who knew the 7 legislators involved in the scandal, testified at deposition that he was “not surprised” when news 8 of the scandal broke because many of the legislators were known to be on “shaky ground.”
 9 Separate Statement ¶ 11 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. C, Smoldon Dep. 45: 23-25, 46: 1-17).

10 The scandal received local, state, and national media attention. Separate Statement ¶ 9 11 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. C, Smoldon Dep. 46: 25, 47: 1-4; id. Ex. D, Aja Dep. 36: 5-13; id. Ex E, 12 Symington Dep. 99: 18-19; see also id. Ex. B, F-H (collected news articles)). The press widely 13 reported that videoclips from the sting showed legislators stuffing tens of thousands of dollars 14 into gym bags while making comments such as:

- 15 • “I sold way too cheap.”
- 16 • “My favorite line is, ‘What’s in it for me?’”
- 17 • “There’s not an issue in this world I give a [expletive] about.”
- 18 • “We all have our prices.”
- 19 • “I like the good life, and I’m trying to position myself so that I can live the good 20 life and have more money.”

21 Separate Statement ¶ 8 (State v. Walker, 185 Ariz. 228, 231 (Ct. App. 1995); Excerpts from 22 indictment tell tale of political deals, Arizona Daily Star, Feb. 10, 1991; Mary K. Reinhart, 23 Videotapes show payoffs: Ariz. legislators, lobbyists appear at sting meetings, Arizona Daily 24 Star, Feb. 8, 1991; L. Feldman, Indictment of Lawmakers Another Blow to Arizona, Los Angeles 25 Times, Feb. 9, 1991, at 1; Sally Ann Stewart, New Tarnish on Arizona’s Image, Bribe Case has 26 State ‘In Shock,’ Lawmakers on Video, USA Today, Feb. 13, 1991, at 6A (Sandhu Decl. Exs. B, 27 F-H)).

28 Arizona voters not only saw the video images of corruption but also repeatedly read

1 reports that the scandal had damaged their fellow citizens' faith in state government. The 2 extensive press coverage of the scandal included multiple articles quoting Arizona legislators 3 lamenting the corrosive effect of the scandal on public trust in government. Separate Statement ¶ 4 10 (See Mary K. Reinhart, AzScam fallout is far from over, politicians say, Arizona Daily Star, 5 June 24, 1991 (quoting then-House Speaker Jane Dee Hull as stating, "Everyone in the world has 6 bought the [AzScam sting] transcripts. Members of the public who have not read them yet, they 7 will be able to read them in every [election] brochure."); John Woestendiek, For Arizona, The 8 Scandals Just Keep On Coming, Philadelphia Inquirer, Feb. 25, 1991, at A2 ("The public 9 confidence in the Legislature before the scandal was at an all-time low," said one legislator.); 10 ("Because of the scandal, [public confidence is] nonexistent.") (Sandhu Decl. Exs. I-J)).
11 Lobbyists were reported as stating that Arizona was "becoming the laughing stock of the nation." 12 Id. And a former State Senate Majority Leader was quoted as saying: "We are still in shock. In 13 terms of confidence it will take years to rebuild." (Seth Mydans, Civics 101 on Tape in Arizona, 14 Or 'We All Have Our Prices,' N.Y. Times, Feb. 11, 1991, at A1 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. K)). Public 15 acknowledgment of corruption by legislators further tarnished the public's perception of the 16 integrity of their public officials. (See Steve Yozwiak, Survey Says Opinions Vary on State 17 Ethics: 2nd 'AzScam' is 'probable,' The Arizona Republic, Oct. 5, 1991, at B1, B4 (quoting 18 legislators as saying that some of their colleagues were "engaged in ethically questionable 19 conduct," such as providing special access to those who contribute to their campaigns) (Sandhu 20 Decl. Ex. L)).

21 C. THE INVISIBLE LEGISLATURE

22 The public trust in the integrity of their electoral system was further harmed by troubling 23 reports of improprieties after Azscam. Beginning in 1996, The Arizona Republic ran a series of 24 front-page articles about "The Invisible Legislature," a phrase the newspaper used to refer to 25 professional lobbyists in the State's capitol. Separate Statement ¶ 12 (E.g., Jonathan Sidener & 26 Kris Mayes, The Invisible Legislature: Dollars and Bills: Lobbyists' influence spreads far but 27 often goes unrecorded, The Arizona Republic, Jan. 21, 1996 A1, A10-A11; Kris Mayes &
28 Michael Murphy, Lobbyists bearing gifts solidify grip on Capitol, The Arizona Republic, Dec. 22,

1 1996 at A1 (detailing lawmakers' reliance on lobbyists for raising funds for campaigns or to retire 2 campaign debt) (Sandhu Decl. Exs. M-N)).

3 The Arizona Republic painted Arizona's political landscape as an environment in which 4 lobbyists and lawmakers routinely undermined the people's attempt to prevent corruption:

5 Reforms passed by voters in 1986 were supposed to prevent the 6 practice known as bundling contributions, but candidates and 7 lobbyists have found a loophole in the law. Bundling occurs when 8 an individual collects a number of checks from individuals and then presents them to one candidate. Lawmakers get around that prohibition by appointing lobbyists to their campaign finance committees, a role that allows them to gather checks from others.

9 Separate Statement ¶ 12 (Michael Murphy, Holiday Premium on Fund-Raising, The Arizona 10 Republic, Dec. 14, 1997, at p. A1 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. O)). In the front-page article, voters read a 11 detailed account about how the Prop. 200 contributions limits were easily circumvented. The 12 article chronicled a fund-raising luncheon for Arizona's Speaker of the House where 45 of the 13 Speaker's 55 fundraising committee members were registered lobbyists. Most of those lobbyists 14 were table sponsors, selling 10 tickets at $200 each for a total of $2,000 in contributions, far more 15 than the applicable $300 contribution limit. Id.

16 Just months before voters adopted the Clean Elections Act, another front-page story in 17 The Arizona Republic reported that the State Senate's Republican President had "assigned the 18 state's most powerful lobbyists to raise money for specific candidates" and had "warned . . .
19 lobbyists that they [would] suffer political retribution in the next session of the Legislature if they 20 raise[d] money for Democrats." Separate Statement ¶ 13 (Chris Moeser, "GOP Drafts Lobbyists 21 For Help In Crucial Races; Senate Chief Reputedly Warns Them Not To Raise Funds For 22 Democrats," The Arizona Republic, Aug. 20, 1998, at A1 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. P)).

23 D. THE CITIZENS CLEAN ELECTIONS ACT

24 On November 3, 1998, twelve years after adopting contribution limits and in response to 25 findings that the then existing "election-financing system...[u]ndermine[d] public confidence in 26 the integrity of public officials," Arizona voters passed the Citizens Clean Elections Act. Ariz.
27 Rev. Stat. § 16-940(B)(5). Louis Hoffman, a citizen drafter of the Act, testified at deposition that 28 AzScam and a more generalized perception of corruption were factors that led to the Act:

1 [T]here was . . . a lot of . . . influence-buying by people giving 2 campaign contributions. There was bundling of contributions 3 [There was] the general concern about people, in effect, buying elections or buying access to politicians [that] was something that was of great concern . . . in motivating the Clean Elections Act.

4 Separate Statement ¶ 14 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. Q, Hoffman Dep. 19:13-25, 20:1-9). Hoffman 5 explained that in addition to this “goal [of] avoiding the unseemly appearance or actual 6 corruption,” the drafters also designed the Act with the goal of “promoting freedom of speech 7 because . . . more candidates would have more opportunity to speak.” (Id. 127:11-129:15).

8 The voter-approved Act created a voluntary public financing program whereby 9 participating candidates could receive the benefit of public financing in exchange for abiding by 10 several countervailing burdens including (1) forgoing all potentially corrupting private 11 contributions, (2) adhering to spending limits, (3) and participating in public debates. Ariz. Rev.
12 Stat. § 16-945(A). Interests in “improv[ing] the integrity of Arizona state government..., 13 encourag[ing] citizen participation in the political process, and . . . promot[ing] freedom of speech 14 under the U.S. and Arizona Constitutions,” motivated voters to enact this system. Ariz. Rev.
15 Stat. § 16-940(A).

16 In order to insulate participating candidates from the corrupting potential of private 17 contributions, Arizona carefully crafted a program offering viable candidates public funding to 18 run competitive campaigns. In order to prevent the waste of public funds on nonviable 19 candidates, the Act offers public grants to those candidates who can demonstrate a modicum of 20 public support by collecting a certain number of five-dollar qualifying contributions. Ariz. Rev.
21 Stat. §§ 16-946, 16-950.

22 Once qualified, a participating candidate is eligible to receive a total grant amount that 23 enables participating candidates to compete in high-spending races. However, since the actual 24 costs of running a competitive campaign will depend on many factors difficult to anticipate prior 25 to an election, the Act devises a flexible grant distribution system that is adjustable in real time.
26 All participating candidates are initially given a portion of the total grant amount as a base grant.
27 To encourage sufficient participation by counteracting the fear that a participating candidate will 28 be outspent by a traditionally-funded opponent or an independent expenditure committee, the Act

1 provides additional matching funds that are capped at twice the amount of the initial grant. Ariz.
2 Rev. Stat. §16-952(E). Such a system enables the program to meet its anti-corruption goals by 3 encouraging sufficient participation without flooding the system with unneeded funds.

4 Capped matching funds are disbursed when: (1) a traditionally-funded opponent's 5 expenditures (or, during the general election, a candidate's receipts, less expenditures made 6 during the primary campaign) exceed the participating candidate's initial disbursement amount; 7 (2) an independent expenditure committee makes an expenditure opposed to the participating 8 candidate; or (3) when an independent expenditure committee makes an expenditure in support of 9 a participating candidate's opponent. Id. § 16-952(A), (C)(1)-(2).

10 This schedule for grant disbursement is an integral part of the package of benefits and 11 burdens that candidates accept when choosing whether to participate in the program and is 12 necessary to incentivize the levels of candidate participation required to make the program 13 successful. In the absence of this pragmatic and reasonable schedule, the state would have to 14 either: (1) grant participating candidates unreasonably high grants at the outset, much of which 15 would be unneeded, wasting state funds and risking public legitimacy, or (2) leave participating 16 candidates to shoulder an inappropriate risk of being drastically outspent by opponents or outside 17 groups and unable to respond to attacks, an option that could dramatically suppress participation.
18 Separate Statement ¶ 34 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. Q, Hoffman Dep. 38:23-43:25).

19 The Act also contains disclosure provisions in order to assist with the administration of 20 the program. Both participating and traditional candidates are required to file periodic campaign 21 finance reports. In order to implement the public funding program, traditional candidates must 22 also file original and supplemental campaign finance reports when their expenditures exceed 70% 23 of the primary election spending limit or when they receive contributions (less their expenditures 24 through the primary) that exceed 70% of the general election spending limit. Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 25 16-941(B)(2). In addition, any individual or entity making independent expenditures on behalf of 26 a candidate must report the expenditures once they exceed a certain set limit. Id. §§ 16-941(D), 27 16-958(A).

1 E. THE ACT HAS RESULTED IN AN INCREASE IN CAMPAIGN SPENDING AND 2 PARTICIPATION IN ARIZONA ELECTIONS

3 In Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), the Supreme Court’s landmark campaign finance 4 decision, the Court noted that public funding “furthers, not abridges, pertinent First Amendment 5 values” by “facilitat[ing] and enlarg[ing] public discussion and participation in the electoral 6 process.” Id. at 92-93 (emphasis added).

7 Over thirty years later, Arizona’s experience with public funding confirms this 8 observation. Contrary to Plaintiffs’ claims that Arizona’s public funding system has placed a 9 drag on political speech, the factual record demonstrates that Arizona has seen a surge in both the 10 number of candidates running for elected office and the amount of money being spent in Arizona 11 elections since the adoption of the Act in 1998.

12 Both candidate expenditures and independent expenditures have increased sharply from 13 levels seen prior to the enactment of public funding. Defendant-Intervenor’s expert, Professor 14 Donald P. Green, Director of the Yale Institution for Social and Policy Studies, analyzed all 15 legislative candidate expenditures in 1998 and 2006. He found that, between 1998 and 2006, 16 spending by legislative candidates rose dramatically. His analysis of campaign finance reports 17 revealed that in 1998 (the election year immediately prior to the enactment of the public financing 18 system) 177 legislative candidates spent a total of $1,333,999 (in 2006 dollars), or an average of 19 $7,537 per candidate. In 2006, the third election cycle under the public financing system, 206
20 legislative candidates spent a total of $6,487,133, or an average of $31,391. Separate Statement ¶
21 37 (Green Decl. Ex. A at 19). Even after accounting for inflation, legislative candidate 22 expenditures in Arizona increased by almost 400% after the enactment of public funding. (Id.)

23 In order to explore Plaintiffs’ allegations that nonparticipating candidates restrain their 24 spending to avoid triggering matching funds, Professor Green compared the top 10 spenders in 25 1998 to the top 10 spenders who were nonparticipating candidates facing a participating major 26 party opponent in 2006. This analysis revealed that spending among the universe of top-27 spending, non-participating legislative candidates increased. Average inflation-adjusted spending 28 among the top 10 spenders in legislative races in the 1998 general election was $34,622 (in 2006

1 dollars) as compared to $42,162 for the top 10 nonparticipating spenders facing a participating 2 major party opponent in 2006. In 1998, the top 10 spenders in legislative races spent $51,279.
3 The top 10 nonparticipating spenders facing a participating major party opponent in 2006 spent 4 $61,395. Thus, spending amongst the top 10 spenders increased by at least 20% between 1998 5 and 2006. Separate Statement ¶ 38 (Green Decl. Ex. A at 14).

6 Professor Green examined Plaintiffs' "drag" theory in yet another way by examining 7 whether candidate spending "clustered" around the trigger matching threshold. If Plaintiffs' 8 claim that matching funds deter spending above the trigger threshold were correct, privately-9 funded candidates in 2006 should have continued spending money up to, but not beyond, the 10 matching funds threshold of $17,918. Professor Green's analysis of expenditures in the 2006 11 elections revealed no such clustering of spending just below the trigger threshold. Instead, he 12 found that, of the 46 nonparticipating candidates who faced a participating opponent in 2006 and 13 who could trigger matching funds by spending more than $17,918, only one spent between 14 $15,000 and $26,000. Separate Statement ¶ 40 (Green Decl. Ex. A at 14). Thirty-nine candidates 15 spent less than $15,000 (showing that their expenditures levels were controlled by factors 16 unrelated to matching funds) and 6 candidates spent well above the threshold (showing that they 17 were not deterred by matching funds). (Id.) In short, the available data provides no evidence that 18 the Act or its matching funds provisions have suppressed spending.

19 Candidates were not the only political actors to experience a surge in political speech after 20 the enactment of public funding. By substituting private money with public funds, public funding 21 programs often free up private money that is then spent on independent expenditures or other 22 political speech. A review of independent expenditures made by independent expenditure 23 organizations, political parties and other political entities demonstrates that the amount of 24 independent expenditures increased dramatically between 1998 and 2006. In 1998 political 25 entities made $29,746.85 in independent expenditures ($36,791.20 in 2006 dollars, adjusted for 26 inflation), and in 2006, independent expenditures totaled $1,262,976.95. Separate Statement ¶ 39 27 (Migally Decl. ¶ 7). Since the enactment of public funding, Arizona has seen a 3,300% increase 28 in the making of independent expenditures. (Id.)

1 Public funding in Arizona also furthers speech by enabling more candidates to run for 2 office. Absent public funding, candidates lacking personal wealth or access to wealthy 3 contributors are deterred from running for office. Plaintiff-Intervenor Dean Martin testified at 4 deposition about the difficulties challengers face raising private funds:

5 Q. And is it harder for challengers to raise money than it is for 6 incumbents?

7 A. Oh, yes. Much harder.

8 Q. Okay.

9 A. Because you've got an existing legislator who can and did 10 threaten other people that he would remember if they 11 supported the challenger in the upcoming legislative session. And so a lot of people said, hey, I like you, but, you know, I can't cross this guy because I think he's going to win.

13 A. [Martin's opponent] made it clear that . . . anybody that 14 supports my opponent is not going to be a friend of mine.

15 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. R, Martin Dep. 43:4-44:5).

16 By providing an alternative source of funding, the Act allows more candidates to run for 17 office. Defendant's expert, Professor Kenneth Mayer, a University of Wisconsin political 18 scientist, has documented a 20 percent increase in the number of contested state Senate races and 19 a 300% increase in the number of competitive state Senate races since the Act was adopted.²
 20 Separate Statement ¶¶ 18-19. Republican political consultant Constantin Querard similarly 21 testified that more candidates were able to run for office and the amount of political dialogue in 22 Arizona has increased because of the availability of public financing. Separate Statement ¶ 35 23 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. S, Querard Dep. 39:10-15; 40:5-18).

24 The record contains specific examples of candidates who were able to run for office 25 because of the Act's funding alternative. One such candidate is Rick Murphy, a plaintiff in this 26 action who accepted public funding in 2004 when he first ran for the state legislature. Mr.

27 ² See Report of Dr. Kenneth Mayer attached to his declaration in support of Defendant's 28 opposition to the preliminary injunction motion ("Mayer Report") at 7 (docket no. 133-3, filed 09/23/2008).

1 Querard, Murphy's consultant, testified that Murphy could not have successfully run for office in 2 2004 without public funding. Separate Statement ¶ 36 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. S, Querard Dep. 78:23-3 79:25). Similarly, Declarant Meg Burton Cahill stated that the availability of public funding 4 allowed her to successfully run for the state legislature against two powerful incumbents.
 5 Separate Statement ¶ 32 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. T, Burton Cahill Decl. ¶ 3).

6 F. MATCHING FUNDS ARE NECESSARY TO ACHIEVE THE ACT'S ANTI- 7 CORRUPTION GOALS

8 Under the traditional private fundraising model, candidates have the option to tap private 9 donors or their parties' extensive fundraising networks to quickly respond to unanticipated attacks 10 by high-spending opponents or organizations making independent expenditures. Participation in 11 a public funding program requires candidates to surrender this option, and candidates must 12 instead rely on the state to provide sufficient funds as a substitute for the candidate's ability to 13 engage in defensive private fundraising. To induce candidates to give up this option, Arizona—14 like North Carolina, Connecticut and Maine—had to provide candidates with assurance that they 15 would not be helpless to respond if they were targeted by unanticipated independent expenditures 16 or a high-spending opponent. Separate Statement ¶ 34 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. Q, Hoffman Dep.
 17 38:23-43:25).

18 State Senator Meg Burton Cahill, a 2008 candidate for Senate District 17, testified that the 19 availability of matching funds was a "critical factor" in her decision to participate in the Clean 20 Elections program. Separate Statement ¶ 33 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. T, Burton Cahill Decl. ¶ 5).
 21 According to Senator Cahill, District 17 is one of the most competitive districts in the state 22 making it a prime candidate for the making of independent expenditures. (Id. ¶ 6). Without 23 matching funds, Senator Cahill stated that she and other participating candidates would be unable 24 to respond to false or misleading attacks by independent groups, run a competitive campaign, or 25 effectively communicate with the electorate.³ Separate Statement ¶ 35 (Burton Cahill Decl. ¶ 6).

26 ³ See also Declaration of Tammie Pursely in Support of Defendant's Response in Opposition to 27 Plaintiff and Plaintiff-Intervenor's Motion for Preliminary Injunction at ¶¶4, 8 (docket no. 134, 28 filed 9/23/2008); Declaration of David Schapira in Support of Defendant's Response in Opposition to Plaintiff and Plaintiff-Intervenor's Motion for Preliminary Injunction at ¶¶3-8 in Opposition to Plaintiff and Plaintiff-Intervenor's Motion for Preliminary Injunction ¶¶8-14

1 In short, the state cannot expect candidates to enter the political arena with their hands 2 tied, rendering them helpless targets for unexpected attacks. Without the participation of these 3 candidates, the Act cannot achieve its prophylactic anticorruption goals.

4 III. ARGUMENT

5 A. STANDARD OF REVIEW

6 Summary judgment is of course appropriate where “the pleadings, the discovery and 7 disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any 8 material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); 9 see Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23 (1986).

10 Of particular significance here, a “conclusory, self-serving affidavit, lacking detailed facts 11 and any supporting evidence, is insufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact.” Nilsson v.
12 City of Mesa, 503 F.3d 947, 952 n.2 (9th Cir. 2007) (internal quotations omitted).

13 B. LEVEL OF SCRUTINY

14 Because the Act promotes, rather than abridges, free speech, it does not have to survive a 15 heightened level of scrutiny.

16 But even were this Court to find that Plaintiffs had identified evidence of some modest 17 burden, such a finding would not lead to strict scrutiny. Instead, this Court should apply the 18 “flexible standard” used to review First Amendment or Equal Protection challenges to state 19 election laws. See Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 786-89 (1983); Burdick v. Takushi, 504 20 U.S. 428, 433-34 (1992). Under that standard, before deciding on the appropriate level of 21 scrutiny, a court must “weigh the character and magnitude of the asserted injury to the rights 22 protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments that the plaintiff seeks to vindicate against the 23 precise interests put forward by the State as justifications for the burden imposed by its rule, 24 taking into consideration the extent to which those interests make it necessary to burden the 25 plaintiff’s rights.” Burdick, 504 U.S. at 434 (internal citations omitted).

26
27 (docket no. 136, filed 9/23/2008); Declaration of Pamela Durbin in Support of Defendant’s 28 ¶¶4-5 (docket no. 137, filed 9/23/2008).

1 Even if Arizona’s public financing program created a burden upon the First Amendment 2 rights of nonparticipants—and we submit that it does not—in the campaign finance context, the 3 Court has indicated that not every burden on the exercise of First Amendment rights 4 automatically requires that the regulation at issue be subject to strict scrutiny. See Nixon v. Shrink
 5 Missouri Government PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 387-888 (2000) (quoting Buckley, 424 U.S. at 25) 6 (contribution limits need only be “‘closely drawn’ to match a ‘sufficiently important government 7 interest.’”).

8 Indeed, in the Supreme Court’s seminal decision on public financing, the Court applied a 9 standard of review less than strict scrutiny. In Buckley, the Court upheld a public financing 10 system against First Amendment and Equal Protection challenges because the program was 11 “further[ed]” by “significant” and “important” interests. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 86. Such language 12 makes clear that the “compelling” state interests and “narrow tailoring” that are the hallmarks of 13 strict scrutiny were not applied by the Buckley court in assessing the public financing provisions 14 at issue.

15 Here, Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate any burden on their First Amendment rights.
 16 However, if this Court determines that Plaintiffs have shown such a burden, it is only a modest 17 infringement and must be reviewed under a lesser standard than strict scrutiny.

18 C. PLAINTIFFS’ FIRST AMENDMENT CLAIMS DO NOT WITHSTAND SUMMARY
 19 JUDGMENT.

20 1. THE ACT FURTHERS, RATHER THAN ABRIDGES, FIRST AMENDMENT
 21 RIGHTS.

22 a. UNDISPUTED EVIDENCE ESTABLISHES THAT CAMPAIGN 23 SPENDING AND SPEECH HAVE RISEN DRAMATICALLY SINCE THE 24 ACT WAS ADOPTED.

25 Plaintiffs have failed to adduce evidence sufficient to create a genuine issue of material 26 fact on their claim that the Act abridges free speech. To the contrary, as discussed above, the 27 undisputed campaign-finance data establishes that since voters adopted the Act in 1998, overall 28 candidate spending in Arizona has more than quadrupled, that more candidates are running for office, and that independent expenditures have increased by more than 3300%. Even among top-spending, non-participating candidates, average spending has increased significantly since the Act

1 was adopted. And there is no evidence that spending by privately-financed candidates with 2 participating opponents clusters just under the matching funds threshold.

3 Lacking support in the data for their claim that matching funds chill speech, Plaintiffs rely 4 on their own declarations. No genuine issue of fact exists, however, “where the only evidence 5 presented is ‘uncorroborated and self-serving’ testimony.” Villiarimo v. Aloha Island Air, Inc., 6 281 F.3d 1054, 1061 (9th Cir. 2002).

7 Plaintiffs have adduced no data that backs up their self-serving declarations. To the 8 contrary, Professor Green’s finding that spending by non-participating candidates does not cluster 9 around the trigger threshold establishes that matching funds do not have the effect that Plaintiffs 10 claim.

11 Moreover, Plaintiffs’ own actions and deposition testimony undermine the claims made in 12 their declarations. State Senate President Robert Burns’ spending was not chilled by the 13 matching-funds provision; he triggered matching funds in the 2002, 2004, and 2006 election 14 cycles. Burns even acknowledged at deposition that he paid no attention to his opponents’ receipt 15 or expenditure of matching funds. Separate Statement ¶¶ 23-24 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. U, Burns Dep.
16 40:11-41:10, 50:25-51:6; id. Exs. V-X (Citizens Clean Election Commission Disbursement Data 17 for 2002- 2006)). Moreover, Burns, an individual who ran for state legislative office both before 18 and after the enactment of the Act, conceded that he could not show that his communications with 19 voters had decreased since the Act’s passage. Separate Statement ¶ 25 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. U, 20 Burns Dep. at 100:15-103:9). Other plaintiffs could not recall whether they had triggered 21 matching funds in the past. Separate Statement ¶ 27 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. R, Martin Dep. 28:1-4).

22 b. AS A MATTER OF LAW, MATCHING FUND PROVISIONS THAT ARE 23 PART OF A PUBLIC FUNDING SCHEME DO NOT BURDEN SPEECH

24 Plaintiffs base their First Amendment claims not on hard evidence, but on a misreading of 25 campaign finance doctrine. The consensus of the federal circuit courts who have ruled on the 26 constitutionality of trigger matching provisions as part of a public funding system is that trigger 27 matching funds do not, in themselves, burden the First Amendment rights of nonparticipating 28 candidates and independent organizations, and are justified by compelling state interests. See

1 Leake, 524 F.3d at 437-38; Daggett v. Comm'n on Governmental Ethics & Election Practices, 2 205 F.3d 445, 464 (1st Cir. 2000). Contrary to Plaintiffs' contention, the Supreme Court's recent 3 decision in Davis is not controlling in the public funding context and therefore does not alter the 4 circuit courts' long-standing authority.

5 The most on-point authorities are the decisions of the First and Fourth Circuits upholding 6 matching funds provisions like those in Arizona. Leake, 524 F.3d at 437 (4th Cir. 2008);
7 Daggett, 205 F.3d at 464. In Daggett, the First Circuit considered the matching funds provision 8 of Maine's Clean Elections Act. It concluded that Maine's "public funding system in no way 9 limits the quantity of speech one can engage in or the amount of money one can spend engaging 10 in political speech, nor does it threaten censure or penalty for such expenditures." Daggett, 205 11 F.3d at 464.

12 Similarly, in Leake, the Fourth Circuit affirmed the constitutionality of the matching funds 13 provision in North Carolina's Judicial Campaign Reform Act. 524 F.3d at 437. The Leake court 14 explained that "[P]laintiffs remain free to raise and spend as much money, and engage in as much 15 political speech, as they desire." Id. Indeed, it found that "North Carolina's provision of 16 matching funds is likely to result in more, not less, speech." Id. at 438.

17 Both Daggett and Leake found unpersuasive the Eighth Circuit's decision in Day v.
18 Holahan, 34 F.3d 1356 (8th Cir. 1994), the only circuit court opinion to strike down a matching 19 funds provision. As the First and Fourth Circuits both noted, the Eighth Circuit itself had 20 declined to follow Day's reasoning in a subsequent case, Rosenstiel v. Rodriguez, 101 F.3d 1544 21 (8th Cir. 1996). See Daggett, 205 F.3d at 464 n.25 (noting that the "continuing vitality of Day is 22 open to question"); Leake, 524 F.3d at 438 ("the Day decision appears to be an anomaly even 23 within the Eighth Circuit, as demonstrated by that court's later decision in Rosenstiel").

24 Plaintiffs ask this Court to ignore this authority and hold that the Supreme Court's 2008 25 decision in Davis v. Federal Election Commission, 128 S.Ct. 2759, 2773 (2008), a case that took 26 place outside of the public funding context, somehow sub silentio overruled this consensus of 27 circuit authority in a separate area of law. The Supreme Court does not "hide elephants in 28 mouseholes." See Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass'ns, 531 U.S. 457, 468 (2001). If it meant to 1 overturn such consensus it would have done so explicitly.

2 Nor does the reasoning of Davis call into question the constitutionality of Arizona's 3 speech-maximizing approach to financing elections. Davis did not concern public financing or 4 matching funds, but rather the "Millionaire's Amendment" of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform 5 Act (BCRA). The Millionaire's Amendment raised the contribution limits of a candidate three-6 fold when that candidate's self-financing opponent indicated an intent to spend more than 7 $350,000 of his personal funds. Davis, 128 S. Ct. at 2773.

8 The Court found this provision to be "unprecedented" because it applied "asymmetrical" 9 and "discriminatory" contribution limits to otherwise similarly-situated candidates, both of whom 10 were competing to raise private funds. Id. at 2770-73. It ruled that the Millionaire's Amendment 11 burdened First Amendment rights because the discriminatory contribution limits created an 12 advantage under the law for one candidate over his similarly-situated opponent. Id. at 2772. The 13 Court also held that the provision was not justified by any interest in reducing corruption or its 14 appearance, since it regulated only a candidate's own expenditures (which created no risk of 15 corruption) and increased the fundraising limits for his opponent (creating a greater risk of the 16 appearance of corruption). Id. at 2773.

17 Contrary to Plaintiffs' claims, Davis did not hold that all triggered benefits to a candidate 18 create an unconstitutional burden on her opponent. Pls. Sec. Am. Comp. ¶¶ 34, 51. The plaintiff 19 in Davis had suggested that the Millionaire's Amendment was unconstitutional because "making 20 expenditures . . . has the effect of enabling his opponent to raise more money and to use that 21 money to finance speech that counteracts and thus diminishes the effectiveness of Davis' own 22 speech." Id. at 2770.

23 Although ultimately ruling in Davis's favor, the Supreme Court did not adopt this line of 24 reasoning. To the contrary, the Court held that had the plaintiff's personal expenditures triggered 25 a rise in "the contribution limits for all candidates, Davis' argument would plainly fail." Id. The 26 Court reiterated this point: "if §319(a)'s elevated contribution limits applied across the board, 27 Davis would not have any basis for challenging those limits."

28 So it was the provision's "asymmetrical contribution scheme" which produced

1 “discriminatory” contribution limits for similarly-situated, privately-financed opponents—not the 2 trigger mechanism per se—that was the basis of the Court’s finding of an unconstitutional 3 burden. Id. at 2772 and n.7 (“[T]he vigorous exercise of the right to use personal funds to 4 finance speech produces fundraising advantages for opponents in the competitive context of 5 electoral politics”). As the Court emphasized, “[w]e have never upheld the constitutionality of a 6 law that imposes different contribution limits for candidates who are competing against each 7 other.” Id. at 2771.

8 Unlike the Millionaire’s Amendment at issue in Davis, the Clean Elections Act does not 9 treat similarly-situated candidates differently. Under the Act, all candidates are free to choose the 10 financing system (traditional or public) that maximizes their speech. By choosing public funding, 11 a candidate may gain access to matching funds; but in exchange she must endure the burdens of 12 qualifying, agree to spending limits, attend mandatory debates, and reject most private 13 contributions, burdens that do not befall the privately-financed candidate. By contrast, under the 14 Millionaire’s Amendment, those candidates who were subjected to lower contribution limits 15 gained no regulatory advantages, and those with higher limits were subjected to no additional 16 burdens. Matching funds thus are not like the asymmetrical contribution limits that the 17 Millionaire’s Amendment applied to privately-financed candidates. They are an essential 18 component of the public-financing alternative, an alternative that all candidates are free to pursue 19 or decline.

20 In fact, the Supreme Court has long recognized the constitutionality of a system that 21 provides candidates with the option of choosing between the countervailing benefits and costs of 22 public and private financing:

23 Congress may engage in public financing of election campaigns and 24 may condition acceptance of public funds on an agreement by the 25 candidate to abide by specified expenditure limitations. Just as a 26 candidate may voluntarily limit the size of the contributions he chooses to accept, he may decide to forgo private fundraising and accept public funding.

27 Buckley, 424 U.S. at 57 n. 65. The Court adhered to this view in Davis, stating that “Congress . . .
28 may condition acceptance of public funds on an agreement . . . to abide by specific expenditure

1 limitations even though we found an independent limit to be unconstitutional.” 128 S. Ct. at 2772 2 (internal quotations omitted).

3 Thus, unlike in Davis, the choice confronting candidates in Arizona is constitutionally 4 acceptable. Knowing the benefits and burdens of the private and public financing options, each 5 candidate may choose the option that maximizes his or her speech. So long as the differences 6 between the relative benefits and burdens of participation and nonparticipation are not so extreme 7 that they coerce participation (a point discussed below), there is no burden on the First 8 Amendment rights of nonparticipants. See Daggett, 205 F.3d at 470. The Act’s speech-9 maximizing options further, rather than abridge, First Amendment rights.

10 In short, after Davis was decided in June 2008, Leake and Daggett remain sound authority 11 for the constitutionality of matching funds. See North Carolina Right to Life, Inc. v. Leake, 524 12 F.3d 427, 437 (4th Cir. 2008), cert. denied by Duke v. Leake, 129 S.Ct. 490 (Nov. 3, 2008).

13 c. PARTICIPATION IN THE ACT’S PUBLIC FUNDING OPTION IS 14 VOLUNTARY.

15 There is likewise no merit to Plaintiff-Intervenors’ claim that the Act abridges First 16 Amendment rights by coercing participation in the Act’s public funding option. See Complaint in 17 Intervention at ¶¶ 51, 57-64.

18 The First Circuit considered and rejected an identical challenge to Maine’s Clean 19 Elections Act in Daggett. 205 F.3d at 470. The Daggett court recognized that:

20 A state need not be completely neutral on the matter of public 21 financing of elections and that a public funding scheme need not 22 achieve an exact balance between benefits and detriments. In fact, a voluntary campaign finance scheme must rely on incentives for participation, which, by definition, means structuring the scheme so that participation is usually the rational choice.

23 Id. (internal quotations and citations omitted). Only where the incentives to participate “stray 24 beyond the pale” and “create disparities so profound that they become impermissibly coercive” 25 do First Amendment concerns arise. Id. (quoting Vote Choice, Inc. v. DiStefano, 4 F.3d 26, 38-39 26 (1st Cir. 1993)).

27 Applying this standard, the Daggett court held that the Maine Clean Elections Act did not 28 coerce candidate participation. While noting the benefits of participation, the First Circuit also 1 cited the significant “detriments” and challenges faced by participating candidates including the 2 need to obtain $5 qualifying contributions, the limited amount of the initial grant, the uncertainty 3 of matching funds, the limit on matching funds, and the inability to raise or spend any funds apart 4 from those received from the Commission—in short, the exact same issues that participating 5 candidates in Arizona face. Id. at 471. As a matter of law, Plaintiff-Intervenors’ coercion claim 6 fails.

7 Nor have Plaintiff-Intervenors adduced sufficient evidence to mount an as-applied 8 challenge to the Act. The undisputed record establishes that candidates, including Plaintiff-9 Intervenors, can and do choose to run privately-financed campaigns in Arizona. While 10 participation rates have steadily climbed as awareness of the public financing option has 11 increased, one in three candidates still opted for private financing in the 2008 primary and general 12 elections. Separate Statement ¶ 43 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. Y, Citizens Clean Elections Commission 13 2008 Annual Report at 8). There is, in short, no evidence that candidates are coerced to 14 participate.

15 Only one Plaintiff-Intervenor claims that he “may be” coerced to participate in the 2010 16 elections, and that party’s self-serving speculation is not sufficient to create a genuine issue of 17 material fact. See Complaint in Intervention ¶ 8. History disproves Plaintiff-Intervenor Martin’s 18 speculative assertion: he has declined the option of running as a participating candidate in each of 19 his four prior campaigns and won each of his races. Separate Statement ¶ 26 (Sandhu Decl. Exs.
20 Z-CC, Campaign Finance Reports 2002-2006). Furthermore, Martin testified that he did not 21 think that the elimination of matching funds would make any difference in his decision whether to 22 accept public funding in 2010. Separate Statement ¶ 29 (Sandhu Decl. Ex. R, Martin Dep. at 23 86:11-87:12). Because matching funds will not affect Martin’s choice between the public and 24 private funding options, the matching funds provisions cannot coerce him to become a 25 participating candidate.

26 In short, there is no genuine issue of material fact regarding Plaintiff-Intervenor Martin’s 27 coercion claim. The undisputed evidence establishes that candidates remain free to choose 28 private over public fundraising.

1 2. THE ACT IS NARROWLY TAILORED TO SERVE MULTIPLE COMPELLING
2 GOVERNMENT INTERESTS.

3 Even if Plaintiffs could show that the Act abridged their speech, which they cannot, their 4 First Amendment claims fail if the Act is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling government 5 interest. The Act is essential to promoting two interests that both voters and the Courts have 6 found compelling: promoting campaign speech and combating the reality or appearance of 7 corruption.

8 a. BY EXPANDING SPEECH, THE ACT FURTHERS A COMPELLING 9 GOVERNMENT INTEREST.

10 The overwhelming evidence that the Act has expanded, rather than abridged, free speech 11 both defeats Plaintiffs' claim that their own speech has been chilled and establishes that the Act 12 furtheres compelling government interests.

13 Arizona's compelling interest in promoting First Amendment values through the adoption 14 of an effective public financing system is well established. In Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 15 (1976), the Supreme Court's landmark campaign finance decision, the Court upheld the 16 Presidential public financing system. Id. at 57 n.65. It emphasized that public financing 17 "furthers, not abridges, pertinent First Amendment values" by "facilitat[ing] and enlarg[ing] 18 public discussion and participation in the electoral process, goals vital to a self-governing 19 people." Id. at 92-93 (emphasis added).

20 While the Buckley Court did not explicitly use the term "compelling" to describe the 21 government's interest in promoting First Amendment values through public financing, its 22 reference to that interest as a "goal[] vital to a self-governing people" left little room for doubt 23 that the interest is in fact compelling. Indeed, lower courts have since recognized that states have 24 "a compelling interest in encouraging candidates to accept public financing and its accompanying 25 limitations which are designed to promote greater political dialogue among the candidates." 26 Wilkinson v. Jones, 876 F.Supp. 916, 928 (W.D. Ky. 1995) (emphasis added).

27 b. THE ACT COMBATS CORRUPTION.

28 The undisputed evidence also establishes that Arizona voters adopted the Clean Elections Act as an appropriately-tailored remedy to serve their compelling interest in deterring corruption.

1 (1) ARIZONA VOTERS HAD A COMPELLING INTEREST IN 2 COMBATING CORRUPTION.

3 It is well established that “[r]educing corruption and the appearance of corruption are 4 compelling government interests.” Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law at 11 (docket 5 no.185, filed 10/17/2008); see also Buckley, 424 U.S. at 25-27 (noting that quid pro quo 6 corruption undermines “the integrity of our system of representative democracy” and the 7 appearance of corruption must be avoided “if confidence in the system of representative 8 Government is not be eroded to a disastrous extent”); First Nat’l Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 9 U.S. 765, 788 n.26 (1978) (“The importance of the governmental interest in preventing 10 [corruption] has never been doubted.”). As the Supreme Court has explained:

11 Leave the perception of impropriety unanswered, and the cynical 12 assumption that large donors call the tune could jeopardize the 13 willingness of voters to take part in democratic governance.
 14 Democracy works ‘only if the people have faith in those who 15 govern, and that faith is bound to be shattered when high officials 16 and their appointees engage in activities which arouse suspicions of 17 malfeasance and corruption.

18 Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 390 (2000) (quoting United States v.
 19 Mississippi Valley Generating Co., 364 U.S. 520, 562 (1961)).

20 In the years leading up to the adoption of the Clean Elections Act, Arizona voters had 21 good reason to suspect “malfeasance and corruption” among their elected officials. The extensive 22 media coverage of AzScam revealed in vivid and undeniable detail that the threat of corruption 23 from contributions was real and pervasive.⁴ Arizona voters responded by adopting the Act in 24 which they expressly stated that “our current election-financing system . . . [u]ndermines public 25 confidence in the integrity of public officials.” Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-940(B)(5). In short, the 26 evidence that Arizona voters perceived a threat of corruption and adopted the Act to address that

27 _____
 28 ⁴ It is no answer to Arizonans’ first-hand experience with corruption that academic studies have been unable to draw a conclusive link between campaign contributions and official acts. As the Supreme Court has recognized, the studies are conflicting and in any event there is an “absence of any reason to think that public perception has been influenced by the studies.” Nixon, 528 U.S. at 394-95. Particularly in light of the videotaped footage and broad media coverage from AzScam, the public was well aware that “there is little reason to doubt that sometimes large contributions will work actual corruption of our political system, and no reason to question the existence of a corresponding suspicion among voters.” Id.

1 threat is overwhelming. The Supreme Court has upheld campaign finance restrictions based on 2 far less direct evidence of corruption. See Nixon, 528 U.S. at 393 (relying on a state legislator’s 3 affidavit that there was a potential for corruption and newspaper reports of large contributions 4 from business interests).

5 Arizona’s leading newspaper also published reports that legislators and lobbyists were 6 circumventing the contribution limits voters implemented twelve years earlier by having lobbyists 7 “bundle” contributions from clients and colleagues. In light of Arizona’s public awareness of the 8 bundling issue, “the evidence support[ed] the long-recognized rationale of combating 9 circumvention of contribution limits designed to combat the corrupting influence of large 10 contributions to candidates from individuals and nonparty groups.” Federal Election Commission 11 v. Colorado Republican Federal Campaign Committee, 533 U.S. 431, 456 n.18 (2001) 12 (upholding limits on coordinated party expenditures because such expenditures posed a threat of 13 circumvention of contribution limits).

14 In short, Arizona voters plainly had a compelling interest of the highest magnitude in 15 adopting measures designed to combat the corruption revealed in AzScam.

16 (2) THE ACT IS AN APPROPRIATELY-TAILORED SOLUTION TO 17 ARIZONA’S HISTORY OF CORRUPTION AND CIRCUMVENTION OF CONTRIBUTION LIMITS.

18 The Act represents a well-tailored remedy to the corrupt practices observed in Arizona 19 during the 1990s. As far back as Buckley, the Supreme Court recognized that “public financing 20 as a means of eliminating the improper influence of large private contributions furthers a 21 significant governmental interest.” 424 U.S. at 96. The First Circuit in Daggett similarly noted 22 that a candidate who accepts public funding benefits from “the assurance that contributors will 23 not have an opportunity to seek special access” and from “the avoidance of any appearance of 24 corruption.” 205 F.3d at 471; see also Leake, 524 F.3d at 440-41 (noting that “the state’s public 25 financing system . . . is designed to promote the state’s anti-corruption goals”). Similarly, 26 Republican political consultant Querard testified that participating candidates have the “freedom 27 in essence to vote [their] conscience” without “ever hav[ing] to worry about will I be targeted or 28 will the people that help me get elected . . . feel betrayed.” (Sandhu Decl. Ex. S, Querard Dep. at 1 61: 7-22.).

2 Matching funds in particular are essential to a viable public financing alternative in 3 Arizona. As the First Circuit explained in upholding Maine’s clean elections system, “without 4 the matching funds . . . candidates would be much less likely to participate because of the obvious 5 likelihood of massive outspending by a non-participating opponent.” Daggett v. Comm’n on 6 Governmental Ethics and Election Practices, 205 F.3d 445, 469 (1st Cir. 2000).

7 Indeed, numerous participating candidates have submitted declarations confirming that 8 matching funds played a key role in their decision to accept public funding.⁵ Likewise, Professor 9 Mayer has examined various public financing systems and found that matching funds are key to 10 encouraging candidate participation.⁶ Mr. Querard similarly testified that, absent matching funds, 11 participation rates would decline. (Sandhu Decl. Ex. S, Querard Dep. at 32:2-24).⁷

12 Arizona voters justifiably concluded that contribution limits alone were not sufficient to 13 combat corruption. The $200 limits on individual contributions to state legislative candidates 14 were in place five years before AzScam occurred. The Arizona Republic’s “The Invisible 15 Legislature” series also fostered a public perception that lobbyists and elected officials were 16 regularly circumventing the contribution limits through the practice of bundling. Having given 17 contribution limits twelve years to succeed, Arizona voters understandably concluded that more 18 was needed.⁸ In short, the Clean Elections Act was the rational next step in Arizona’s effort to 19 alleviate the pernicious effects of private contributions.

20 ⁵ See Sandhu Decl. Ex. T, Burton Cahill Decl. ¶ 5 submitted in support of Defendant-21 Intervenors’ Opposition To Motion for Preliminary Injunction (docket no. 121, filed 9/23/2008); 22 see also the declarations filed by participating candidates Tammie Pursely, David Schapira, Ed 23 Ableser, and Pamela Durbin in support of Defendants’ Response in Opposition To Motion for 24 Preliminary Injunction (supra, footnote 3).

25 ⁶ Mayer Report at 8.

26 ⁷ Plaintiffs’ attack on the matching funds provision reflects their ideological position that the 27 public financing system as a whole should be repealed. Martin Dep. at 32:20-24 (Q. Have you 28 supported legislation to effectively get rid of the Clean Elections Act? A. To limit, neuter or repeal in various shapes”); id. at 36:4-7 (“Q. . . . if the matching funds component of the Clean Elections Act was eliminated, would you still be opposed to the Clean Elections Act? A.
Yes.”) (Sandhu Decl. Ex. R).

⁸ Plaintiffs’ position that contribution limits are a less restrictive alternative to public financing is misleading since Plaintiffs believe Arizona’s contribution limits are also unconstitutional.
(Sandhu Decl. Ex. R, Martin Dep. 32:25-33:9.)

1 Plaintiffs ask this Court to overturn the voter-approved Act because candidates allegedly 2 used public money in a way not contemplated by the voters in two out of the 429 races in which 3 there was a participating candidate between 2000 and 2008. Separate Statement ¶ 46 (Migally 4 Decl. ¶ 9). The Supreme Court has never held that a campaign finance restriction that is used 5 properly 99.5% of the time is unconstitutional merely because it was not 100% effective. Even if 6 the Court found this .5% occurrence to be of concern, the Court has consistently upheld 7 regulations that were capable of circumvention. For example, the well-recognized potential for 8 the circumvention of contribution limits never served as a justification for their invalidation. See 9 Colorado Republican, 533 U.S. at 456. To the contrary, the Court has responded to evidence of 10 circumvention by giving Congress the flexibility to craft campaign finance laws that respond to 11 the ever-changing strategies of moneyed interests:

12 Many years ago we observed that “[t]o say that Congress is without 13 power to pass appropriate legislation to safeguard ... an election 14 from the improper use of money to influence the result is to deny to 15 the nation in a vital particular the power of self protection.” We 16 abide by that conviction in considering Congress' most recent effort 17 to confine the ill effects of aggregated wealth on our political 18 system. We are under no illusion that BCRA will be the last 19 congressional statement on the matter. Money, like water, will 20 always find an outlet. What problems will arise, and how Congress 21 will respond, are concerns for another day.

22 McConnell v. Federal Election Commission, 540 U.S. 93, 223-224 (2003) (emphasis added; 23 internal citations omitted).

24 Plaintiffs of course do not seek to amend the Act to address the minor problems that arose 25 during the 2008 election; nor do they suggest that the Court should give the people, the 26 legislature, or the administrative process the opportunity to address the issue. Instead, they ask 27 this Court to overturn the voter-approved Act. In so doing, Plaintiffs greatly overstate the threat 28 of corruption from gaming and dramatically understate the threat of corruption from shifting publicly-funded candidates back into the world of private financing. If the Clean Elections Act is to be judged in part based on the acts of candidates in two races, then its benefits must also be assessed based upon what has not recurred in Arizona since its enactment: a scandal on the scale of AzScam and a crisis of confidence in state government.

1 D. PLAINTIFFS’ EQUAL PROTECTION CLAIMS ALSO FAIL AS A MATTER OF LAW.

2 Where a law distinguishes between classes of individuals, the Constitution’s equal 3 protection requirement is satisfied so long as the classification rationally furthers a legitimate 4 state interest. See Nordlinger v. Hahn, 505 U.S. 1, 10 (1992). Because the Act does not 5 discriminate against a suspect class and, as explained in detail above, is indisputably rationally 6 related to a legitimate state interest, Plaintiffs’ Fourteenth Amendment equal protection claims 7 fail as a matter of law.

8 Plaintiffs wrongly contend that the Act violates the equal protection clause because it 9 applies different rules to candidates and their supporters regarding campaign contributions and 10 reporting requirements depending on whether the candidates choose to accept public campaign 11 financing. However, when two groups are not similarly situated, the equal protection clause does 12 not prevent the government from treating them differently. As the First Circuit explained in 13 rejecting a virtually-identical legal challenge in Vote Choice, Inc. v. DiStefano, 4 F.3d 26 (1st Cir.
14 1993):

15 First, the statute does not impose unequal treatment but gives 16 candidates an authentic choice. Second, the statute treats candidates 17 differently on the basis of their actions rather than their beliefs—18 actions which, as we have seen, possess differing implications for the integrity and effectiveness of the electoral process. The equal protection clause does not interdict such classifications.

19 Id. at 40 n. 17; see also Buckley, 424 U.S. at 95 (upholding against equal protection attack a 20 system which actually excluded minority party candidates); Jenness v. Fortson, 403 U.S. 431, 21 441-42 (1971) (rejecting equal protection challenge to election law and observing that 22 “[s]ometimes the grossest discrimination can lie in treating things that are different as though they were exactly alike”).

23 Such is the case here: when one candidate chooses to accept public financing, he or she is 24 no longer similarly situated to a candidate who chooses not to participate in Arizona’s clean 25 elections system, and no constitutional concerns are raised by treating the candidates differently.
26 To hold otherwise would fly in the face of the Supreme Court’s unequivocal directive that the 27 government may impose differing restrictions on candidates depending on whether they choose to 28

1 accept public funding. See Buckley, 424 U.S. at 57 n. 65 (The legislature “may engage in public 2 financing of election campaigns and may condition acceptance of public funds on an agreement 3 by the candidate to abide by specified expenditure limitations. Just as a candidate may voluntarily 4 limit the size of the contributions he chooses to accept, he may decide to forgo private fundraising 5 and accept public funding.”).

6 Moreover, even if participating and non-participating candidates could be considered 7 similarly situated, the Act’s differing treatment of such individuals is justified by the rational and 8 indeed compelling governmental interests in increasing communication between candidates and 9 their electorates, freeing candidates from the pressures of fundraising, and combating corruption 10 in the political process. See Vote Choice, 4 F.3d at 39.

11 To the extent Plaintiffs characterize their flawed First Amendment claims as an equal 12 protection violation, the claims fail for the reasons detailed above. The Act promotes rather than 13 abridges First Amendment expression. And even if Plaintiffs could adduce evidence of 14 abridgment, multiple compelling government interests support the Act. In short, Plaintiffs’ equal 15 protection claims fail as a matter of law.

IV. CONCLUSION

Because there are no genuine issues of fact, and because Plaintiffs' First Amendment and equal protection claims fail as a matter of law, this Court must grant summary judgment for Defendants and Defendant-Intervenor.
